About Hector

A neighbor, a lawyer, an advocate.

Hector Morales is a proud Chicagoan and resident of the Rogers Park neighborhood on the city's Northside. He enjoys riding his bicycle through the city's neighborhoods, reading novels from the Chicago Public Library, and making electronic music.

Hector is a great fan of the arts — music, cinema, theatre, dance, and drawing — and believes they play a vital role in the development of youth in Chicago. For that reason, he wants to incorporate electronic music as part of the core curriculum in CPS grade schools.

His training as a lawyer will help in creating policy that protects young people in the classroom, protects worker rights, advocates for better schools, and secures more funding from State and Federal legislatures. He believes that by working together with fellow CPS board members, the curriculum can be improved, student outcomes can be elevated, and high-quality schools can be created to support every student at CPS.

Rogers Park Resident
Deeply rooted in the Northside community he'll serve.

Solo Practitioner Attorney
20+ years representing small businesses.

Arts Advocate
Believes arts and electronic music are essential to youth development.

Independent Decision-Maker
Research-based decisions free from outside interests.